This plugin will take a backup of your blist.xml and load in all user groups and buddy lists. Adds a users BList.xml from the plugin folder to the users BList.xml in the users profile folder. The backup blist.xml is of the same name as the users BList.xml, so if the users name is "user" and their blist.xml is in the plugin folder, then the backup blist.xml will be called "user". Dipeptidyl peptidase 4 inhibition ameliorates proteinuria and kidney injury in a murine model of Alport syndrome. Alport syndrome (AS) is a hereditary kidney disease characterized by chronic nephritis, progressive kidney failure, and hearing loss. Current treatment strategies do not alter the natural course of this disease and there is no cure for AS. Here we used a drug-discovery approach to develop a therapeutic candidate for AS. We developed a cell-based activity assay for dipeptidyl peptidase 4 (DPP4) that is used to screen for small molecules that inhibit DPP4 activity in normal or AS fibroblasts. One of these molecules, denoted VPT-785, also inhibited the secretion of transforming growth factor- β (TGF- β), a pro-fibrotic cytokine, by a murine podocyte cell line. An oral formulation of VPT-785 was developed and given to male AS mice (Cx37-KO). It was well tolerated, and treatment with VPT-785 for 6 weeks significantly reduced albuminuria, podocyte injury, and glomerular and tubular fibrosis. Furthermore, VPT-785 treatment reduced plasma levels of fibrosis-related factors, including TGF- β and monocyte chemoattractant protein-1 (MCP-1), and inhibited the expression of collagen type I and fibronectin in fibrotic kidney tissues. VPT-785 also reduced the expression of MCP-1 and pro-fibrotic cytokines, including IL-17, in the kidneys of dendritic cells, macrophages, and T cells from AS mice. These results suggest that VPT-785 is a promising therapeutic candidate for AS. Hull Kingston Rovers expect to announce the signing of 35-year-old New Zealander Steve Mackay in the next few days, with the intention of completing a squad that has been put together under Tony Brown for the second time this season.
