Those content have the same thumbnails in each listview, the difference is that they both, has their own code to fill each ListView, is it possible, that they have their own datasource and somehow share a common code in order to synchronize the thumbnails? P.5. I have already found the answer in my previous question. ListView thumbnail problem A: Assume you have two ListViews, if the idea is to have the same images but different data (you already have code to handle this) you could have the control inherit the ListView like so: MyCustomListView.xaml and MyCustomListView.xaml.cs public class MyCustomListView : ListView { public DataAdapter public MyCustomViewOfEnumerable data { this.data = data; this.DataContext = this; } public IEnumerable ItemsSource { get { return data; } } } Then just set the DataContext property of the ListView to the shared data like so: MainPage.xaml

I keep having these garbage ads appear on the top right of my screen, even when I'm in Chrome and it's the only tab open. It's most annoying, and although I've never had this happen before, I'm sure it's something that needs to be fixed. Is there any way I can block these ads? Why do I get these ads on top of my Chrome window? A: I discovered that it was because I had enabled ad blocking. I had previously been very careful to never remove this setting, because it had never caused a problem in Chrome. When I disabled it, the problem went away. Here's how to check and disable it. I'm assuming you're using Windows. Open Settings. Go to Sync. Go to Data. Scroll down to Download History and click on it. Scroll down to Create a rule for any folder. Click New. In the Rule Type drop down, select One of these, and then Select a Folder. Select the relevant directory (e.g. for me, I select Downloads). In the Conditions box, enter the following: Service: Google Chrome Operation: Delete Value: 0 Click OK to save the rule. After doing that, the unwanted ads should stop. Federal Circuit Decision That Is Based on a Stupid Opinion It's my hope that we do not create more stupid opinions. I hate reading the stuff written by the Federal Circuit. The recent decision in U.S. Indus., Inc. v. BlakeConstr. Co., Case No. 12-1569 (U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit) is a prime example. The facts are not in dispute. Blake built a building using completed, prefabricated modules that it ordered from U.S. Indus. By delivery of the modules it became a manufacturer for the purposes of that Act. After the modules were completed and on site, the owner demolished them. Blake never conveyed to U.S. Indus. any ownership interest in the modules. The dispute is over an indemnification clause contained in the contract between the parties, which reads: "The Contractor shall assume and bear, within the limits of the work description and the Contractor's financial responsibility as defined below, all liability for damage to persons or property that may be caused in
