1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for operating a video display device, which is particularly adapted to be used when it is desired to display a current image which is displayed on the display device, while observing a specified area of the displayed image (a current image is herein defined as a currently viewed image). 2. Description of the Related Art A demand has recently arisen for high-performance video display devices for use in home electronic appliances, for example. In order to serve this demand, the home electronic appliances must be equipped with video display devices which have a higher pixel density, smaller size and faster response time. In order to achieve high-quality display of images, the video display device must satisfy the following conditions: (1) The display screen should have a large display area; PA1 (2) The display screen should be thin; PA1 (3) The display screen should have a high contrast ratio; PA1 (4) The display screen should have a high maximum brightness; PA1 (5) The maximum number of pixels per unit time (herein termed the "pixel rate") should be greater than a predetermined value; and PA1 (6) The power consumption of the display device should be low. In order to satisfy the conditions (1)-(6), it is desirable for the video display device to have a high pixel density. In order to satisfy the condition (1), it is necessary for the video display device to have a display screen which is large enough to be used to display a large-size image, because the size of the display screen is proportional to the amount of information to be displayed. In order to satisfy the conditions (2)-(6), a liquid crystal display device is generally used as the display device. A liquid crystal display device has both display characteristics of pixels (structure and function) and other operating characteristics (manufacturing process, operational voltage, operational speed etc.) which are different from those of a CRT (cathode ray tube) display device. For these reasons, a liquid crystal display device which is intended to satisfy the conditions (1)-(6) has various problems to be solved prior to actual commercialization thereof. The present invention is directed to a solution to the above-mentioned problems. More particularly, the present invention is directed to a method for operating a video display device, which employs a liquid crystal display device to achieve high-quality display of an image, without requiring the use of a CRT
